Non-Manufactured Precious Metal Trading :

Non-manufactured metal trading refers to the buying, selling, and trading of precious metals, such as gold, silver, platinum, palladium, and other non-manufactured forms of metal. In this context, "non-manufactured" means that the metals are in their raw or unprocessed state, without any significant alteration or transformation.

Traders in non-manufactured metal typically deal with bullion, which refers to bars, coins, or ingots of precious metals that are valued primarily for their metal content rather than their aesthetic or collectible qualities. These traders may engage in wholesale or retail transactions, buying metal from suppliers or producers and selling it to customers or other businesses.

Non-manufactured metal trading can take place in various forms, including physical trading where the actual metal is bought and sold, or it can involve derivative trading such as futures contracts or options, where traders speculate on the price movements of the underlying metal without physically owning it.

The non-manufactured metal trading industry plays a significant role in global financial markets, serving as a means for investors, institutions, and individuals to store wealth, hedge against inflation, diversify investment portfolios, and participate in commodities trading. Precious metals are often seen as a store of value and a safe haven asset in times of economic uncertainty.
